GEORGE LIPPARD.

Author of "The Mystery of Florence," "The Memoirs of a Preacher," "Washington and His Men," "The Legends of the American Revolution," or "Washington and His Generals," "The Quaker City," or "The Monk of Monte Christo," "The Legend of Mexico," "The Narrative," "Legends of Bravery," etc., etc.

ONE VOLUME, PRICE 75 CENTS.

This book is beyond doubt the most absorbing novel of the age. New York is certainly the greatest city in America. It is decidedly Metropolitan in its character. Many scenes will be discovered representative of all the classes and races which have an existence in the American Continent, mingled with many others from the Old World. Thus New-York is filled with the most interesting materials for a book, just now any city to the world. It has been the Author's fate to travel well to picture New-York; he has traversed its hills and palaces, but is not travelling; he has traversed its hills and palaces, but is not travelling.—The Ferry over Pearl River.—Destroying the Railroad.—Entering Batou Rouge.

It is difficult to believe, even though the thoroughness of investigation, simplicity and dignity of style and clearness of narration, the work is eminently worthy of the theme, and worthy of the author's well-known scholarship.

We cannot doubt that the people of New-England, and those of New-England, will be interested in the author's researches into the social and standard work in his department. The remaining volumes will be exposed with due celerity!—[New-England.

"This is a noble theme, and it is fortunate that its treatment has been left to one who is possessed of profound learning, elegant culture, and varied experience."—We have had an opportunity to know something of the extent and minuteness of Dr. Fiske's knowledge of the movements of fidelity with which he is pursuing his task of a life's labor, and we are anxious to see him go on. He is a true historian, and a statesman, and a patriot, and a statesman without whom a son's inheritance will be valueless—accuracy and of his earnest desire to get at the fountain of New-England institutions, and to trace the springs of its progress. His work is a labor of love, and hence the public will view it with pleasure, yet both a labor of love, and the closest reflection only can produce.—[Boston Post.]

READ WHAT HAWTHORNE'S WEEKLY SAYS OF "MOODS."

BY LOUISA M. ALCOTT.

This is a short story of life, touching interest by a new writer, and her "Secrets" were remarkable for a humor and insight which ought to have made them much more widely known. In the present tale the conflict of passion in noble characters is drawn with great delicacy and end, and with a freedom from coarseness which is rare. "Moods" is a work of singular sentiment, not moral, nor extempore. It has freshness and self-reliance. Greater experience and ready study will correct the imperfections of art, nor is it a discrediting failing not to have succeeded in a salt-water story. The author's "Secrets" were remarkable in an unbroken demand a Shakespearean subtlety of skill fully to delineate. It is something to have suggested it. After Hawthorne we recall no American love-story of equal power.

Every Bookseller on Broadway will sell for $1.50.

THE HIGH PRICES OF PAPERS.—The great and inevitable increase of prices, and the corresponding increase of the cost of living, has brought about a general increase in the cost of paper, and the consequent increase in the cost of books, newspapers, pamphlets, and other publications.

Booksellers are realizing a good profit on their stock of books and papers. Paper is pretty high just now, and old paper is worth a good price.
